Mr. Cawood's Office—Another Version.

A letter from King George county to the Northern Neck News says: "It is not generally known, perhaps, that among the various departments of the government at Washington, with their numerous divisions and sub-divisions, branches and bureaus, there exists a government sanitarian—a sort of national 'Keely Cure.' It has been in successful operation for several weeks, and in the estimation of the heads of the departments and of members and Senators in Congress it has a long, felt and abiding effect. It is a cure for the chronic cases of that prevalent disease known as office-seeking. We gather this much from Mr. Wm. H. H. Cawood, who has long been a prominent politician of this country and who is well known to many readers of the News in other counties. Mr. C. has taken the treatment and speaks in glowing terms and with much emphasis of its efficacy—says it is a little rough, but very speedy and thorough in its cure. Under the pretense of having been appointed to office he was carried to a lonely spot outside the city walls and put to rest. He was found at the mouth of the city sewers and directed to guard the tools of workmen who were employed there during the day. He was provided with neither food nor fire, and with no shelter except a little two-by-two caboose perched on the brink of a precipice. He surveyed the situation while alone during the twilight hour, and when night set in he lighted his official lamp and said to himself: 'Now I am here, and when you blow up I won't be here.' He handed his resignation to Mr. Meredith next day, declaring that his thirst for office was entirely cured."

Mr. C. remained in the city several days after his retirement from office, and on the third day met with his successor, Mr. Price, of Alexandria. The latter had remained two nights at the sanitarian. On the second night, which was rainy and stormy, a heavy gust of wind blew his shanty over the bank, and while he was trying to escape several dogs from neighboring cabins got after him and a negro shot at him. Price is also cured and has resumed his old business, and Mr. Cawood has entered again upon his duties as superintendent of his own agricultural department at Indian Town, this county."

KILLED AT A WEDDING.—A few nights ago at a wedding in Allegheny county, N. C., there was a large gathering. Among those present was Daniel Slaughter, of Carroll county, Virginia. Just after the ceremony had been performed Slaughter walked near an old man, the uncle of the bride. The old man slipped Slaughter's hand and asked if he thought he was much of a man. Slaughter replied gruffly and cursed the old man. Thereupon he was ordered to leave the house, but soon returned. He was told by the bridegroom to sit down and keep quiet, while the crowd was requested to stand back. Suddenly Slaughter drew a knife and sprang at John Bart, slaying him to the heart. As Bart fell Slaughter tried to again stab him, but the bride seized his hand. She was cut in the arm. Slaughter dashed for the door. There he struck Ed Long, killing him with one stroke. He fled, but was captured next morning two miles away. He said he killed the men because he was being slipped in the face. The feeling ran high against him and he narrowly escaped immediate lynching. He was taken to jail at the little town of Sparta. A telegram states that a mob attacked the jail. The jailer made a stubborn resistance, warning the equally determined mob that he would defend Slaughter with his life. When the doors were smashed in he shot one of the mob, but was overpowered. Slaughter was taken out and hanged. This is the first lynching in North Carolina in fourteen months.

TORN TO PIECES BY A BULL.—M. B. Plant, the leading merchant of Oxford, Neb., was attacked by a bull on the street Saturday afternoon after a fearful struggle was torn to pieces before the infuriated animal could be shot.

POLLARD WITNESS FORBIDDEN.—There came near being a tragedy on Sunday in Boyle county, Ky., over the deposition of Dr. T. M. Lewis, in the Beckridge-Pollard case. Dr. Lewis swore that the late Colonel Swope, who was killed in the memorable duel in Lexington in 1888, with William C. Swope, came to him in Danville, Ky., and asked him to perform an operation on Miss Pollard, at the same time admitting that he was the cause of her ruin. Dr. Lewis refused, he said, to grant the request of Colonel Swope, and the child was allowed to live. He said that in the spring of 1888 he witnessed Swope and the latter told him that the child was alive and being well cared for. This testimony aroused the ire of the brothers of the late republican leader, and Sunday two of them, James and William, called upon Dr. Lewis and denounced him as a liar. The old doctor would not fight, being now just 60, but was afraid that the angry brothers would assassinate him. A heated argument arose and trouble was avoided by the arrival of friends. The brothers of Colonel Swope say he was in Europe at the time Dr. Lewis claims his services were wanted.
